

ALLORAH'S INSIGHTS

June 23, 2008

We are currently in a waning moon which is a time of releasing. I was looking back at the bit I wrote about the possibilities brought in with the new cycle anchored in the vibration of 2008. In the weeks since I wrote that piece, I've noticed that we've all been immersed in releasing and clearing old patterns. I know this is needed in order for those possibilities to become realities. Personally, my ability to understand how critical these changes are has shifted from theoretical to practical on a grand scale. As a result, I am better able to stay motivated during the "darkest before the dawn" segments of life.

For each of us, this last Mercury retrograde has really underscored the patterns that we would do well to release or clear up on an individual basis. I know from my work, that many of us are struggling with our own versions of releasing and clearing. Do not judge yourself on what you were and are presented with. Just work with what you can, as you can. This releasing and clearing is how order is restored and maintained in the universe. This process is always in process. The choice to change remains ours. The choice to not change remains ours.

While you have right to give up, you do not deserve to be given up on. No one does. The challenge differs for each of us. Yes, there will be times when you have only your self to turn to. We each have the opportunity to embark on a new, unknown path toward a new, unknown future. It may be that we have imagined that future, but we have no tested charted course to get there. As a result, confusion ensues; especially when we are in what we believe is a shared experience. While the path has to be taken by "me" that path impacts "us" because there is only us. The wisdom of this process is that "we" are "us." In the end we are faced with ourselves as pieces of a cosmic puzzle.

We are not alone. Independent but not alone because we are all connected. Bear that in mind along your journey and watch how your choices and sensitivities are influenced. We are all being called to awaken. I still believe that in the end, a more compassionate experience will be had by all. Time will tell.

Namaste,
Allorah