

ALLORAH'S INSIGHTS

July 14, 2008

"What if God was one of us? Just a slob like one of us. Just stranger trying to fit in..." Joan Osborne

As humans we have a tendency to anthropomorphize everything, especially god. It may be that we actually need to do so in order to relate to the concept of god. It seems to be our nature as humans to categorize and separate; "us" and "them" if you will. The irony is that we've misconstrued the notion of created in "his" image because ultimately our expressions of god are "him" in our image.

Consider instead; god as the universe full of infinite possibilities rather than simply a crudely benevolent or malevolent diety. What if god is all of us, within us and beyond us; an ever evolving energy form learning new modes of expression. It is in this way then, that we are created in the divine image. We too are constantly evolving and learning new modes of expression. Now everything becomes possible. If we can give ourselves leave to see beyond the archtypes to what is underneath them, to what inspired those archtypes we can find more truth and allow joyful growth.

In this way our instinct to love is re-awakened within us. Then we can be ruled by our loving nature rather than by our need to control. We can live without being a slave to our fear. When fear is not a governing factor, we can be our whole, best and most authentic selves.

Namaste,
Allorah
